

Acknowledgements

There are many people who collaborated to achieve this publication. First, we want to thank the authors who trusted the editors' proposals. This book is a collaborative effort from scholars, researchers, and practitioners from the United States, Colombia, Peru, Argentina, France, Spain, and Mexico. We are grateful for your contributions.

We express a special thanks to our families, wives, and children who, with their patient affection and empathy, allowed us to work on this long-term project. Thanks to Carmina, Rosca, Natalia, Sebastian, Sasha, Josué, and Leonardo.

Thank you to people and academic divisions from ITESO, Jesuit University of Guadalajara, who participated in the project. A special recognition to Claudia Ibarra for her support in the construction of new economic alternatives, to David Foust for his guidance on behalf of the Research Program, and to Gregorio Leal for creating the conditions for this project to take root. Thanks to the academic and editorial reviewers, as well as the Editorial Board and the Publications office, in specific to Lizeth Arámbula, for her guidance throughout the editorial & publishing process.

Special thanks to Mary Ann Beyster, Joseph Blasi and Douglas Kruse for participating in the project which furthers their work to continue improving economic and social well-being around the world.

We honor the participation of Mariana Comellini, who passed away prior to the publication of this book. Rest in peace Mariana.

Finally, thanks to Daniel Lubetzky for instilling an ownership culture & setting a leadership example, to Paz Quinteiro for her careful review and insightful suggestions, and to the readers who took the time to assess the authors contributions. We all strive to contribute to strengthening the economy through shared capitalism & economic democracy.
